Tutorial, Game Mechanics

FIRST TIME PLAYING ONLY.

A hand appears and automatically drags a monster out onto the stage to show the user how it works.

NOTABLE UX

- Drop areas appear when drag begins
- Nearest drag area highlights
- The frontmost drag area plays the alternate animation. These monsters are "front and center".

Instruments Screen

Tap the toggle button at the top to view Instruments. The button switches to allow you to toggle between instruments and monsters.

Instruments do not exist on iPhone due to screen real estate.

Select Level Screen

The main stage does one of a few possible things:

- Fades out to a solid color entirely.
- Darkens down / blurs out
- Pauses

Sound may also fade down 75% (or whatever sounds good, TBD).

From there, "cards" appear for each level. Each card is a thumbnail image and a play button.

Tap anywhere to return to the game.

Load Level

After purchase we'll download the level data. This may take awhile. Once it's finished we'll convert that spinner into a Jam icon. A user will have to tap it to play.

Should we create a local notification when this finishes? Can we background download this?

Start Jam

Tap a purchased or unlocked jam to start playing it. This will exist the level selection screen and go to the Loading Game screen already drawn.

If the game is in the background, we will need to totally fade it out or otherwise make it go away so we can seamlessly load the next screen.

Notes

We may also need to display error messages for the following:

- Failure to purchase. If a user enters their username/ password incorrectly, or pushes "Cancel" before completing a purchase.

- Failure to download. If, after a purchase is completed, our server times out or they have a bad internet connection. We should provide a retry button.

- Failure to restore. Similar to failure to purchase.
